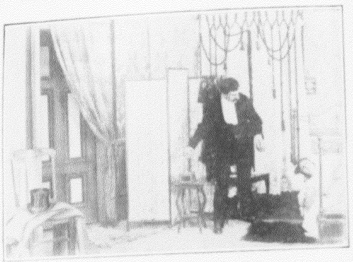
The Great Jewel Robbery.

LENGTH, 750 FEET.



A little orphan girl called "Rags" is adopted by a gang of crooks. She is sent out to sell papers. A sinister looking man roughly casts her from him and is about to strike her when an aristocratic young lady protects her and invites her to call.

At the thieves' rendezvous the little girl overhears a plot to rob the manson of her lady benefacter. Disguising herself as a boy she follows the thieves. One of the thieves obtains a situation at the manston as a butler. A reception is given at which time the young lady is betrothed to a young detective. After the reception she retires, but shortly awakens, beholding a well dressed thief about to chloroform her, bent on stealing her valuable jewels. During the struggle she inflicts a wound on his hand. He escapes with the jewels. When his pals enter, "Rags" in disguise holds them up, and rings the alarm. The thieves are caught and later sentenced.

At the prison quarry a chain gang are at work. They cause a revolt and after a conflict with the guards, escape. The two escaped convicts break into a house where a merry party is in progress. A detective enters and arrests them. "Rags" is present, very nicely dressed. Having a clue that one of the guests knows something of the robbery, she persuades the detective to use the convicts to help them in obtaining evidence. She keeps her eyes on the suspicious guest and finally before the others, she pulls the glove off his hand disclosing the telltale scar. The jewels are found on the suspicious guest. He is placed under arrest while the crooks are allowed to regale themselves at the table.

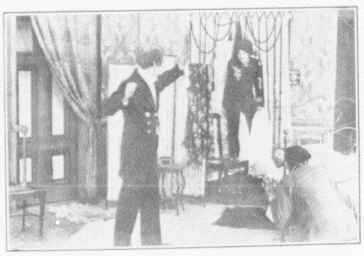
COPYRIGHT 1908

The Great Jewel Robbery

LENGTH, 825 FEET.

A little orphan girl called "Rags" is adopted by a gang of crooks. At the thieves' rendezvous the little girl overhears a plot to rob the mansion of a lady who is always good to her.

One of the thieves obtains a situation at the mansion as a butler.



After the reception the young lady retires, but shortly awakens, beholding a well dressed thief about to chloroform her, bent on stealing her valuable jewels. During the struggle she inflicts a wound on his hand. He escapes with the jewels. When his pals enter, "Rags" holds them up, and rings the alarm. The thieves are caught and later sentenced.

At the prison quarry. A chain gang are at work. They cause a revolt and two escape. The escaped convicts break into a house where a merry party is in progress. A detective arrests them. "Rags" persuades the detective to use the convicts to help them in obtaining evidence against a guest whom she suspects to be the jewel thief. She keeps her eyes on the suspicious guest and finally pulls the glove off his hand disclosing the tell-tale scar. The jewels are found on him and he is placed under arrest.

MANUFACTURER OF

S. Lubin
COPYRIGHTED.

Life Motion Picture Machines, Films, Slides and Stereopticons.

Lubin Building, 926-928 Market St., Phila., Pa.

1000. 8-08

NO. 38